

Research Report: @baseposting X Account and Baseposting.com

Identity & Surface Metadata

Account Handle & Name: The subject is an X (Twitter) account with the handle @baseposting, currently displaying the name “Base Posting” ¹. The account’s bio self-describes it as “a very serious account that posts about base” and includes a link to its website baseposting.com ¹. It lists a location as “Gary, Indiana” (though this is likely facetious) and shows a join date of July 2025 ¹. The account is marked as verified on X (indicating an X Premium subscription as of October 1, 2025) ².

Follower Count & Activity: As of late December 2025, @baseposting had grown to roughly 40,000 followers, up from only ~500 in September 2025 ³. It follows around 700+ other accounts and has made on the order of 2,000+ posts (tweets) ⁴. The high growth rate in Q4 2025 was noted in a trending summary on X ³. The account exhibits frequent posting and engagement (tens of thousands of likes given, per X data) ⁵.

Previous Identity: Notably, historical metadata shows the account underwent a rebranding on November 12, 2025. On that date, the handle changed from @basemaxxing to @baseposting, the display name was set to “Base Posting,” and the bio was edited from “a sorta serious cryptocurrency account on base” to the current phrasing emphasizing “a very serious account that posts about base” ⁶ ⁷. Earlier, the bio had also oscillated between “very serious” and “sorta serious” tone as a form of in-joke ⁸. The location field was changed on the same date from a crypto-centric phrase “terminally onchain” to “Gary, Indiana” ⁹. These changes suggest a conscious effort to align the profile with the emerging “baseposting” trend and brand in late 2025.

Website Association: The account’s profile lists baseposting.com as its website ¹. Initially, in October 2025, the profile’s link field pointed to a now-removed X post or page (previously x.com/basemaxxing) ¹⁰. On December 8, 2025, the profile’s website link was updated to the newly created baseposting.com ¹¹. This indicates the account is directly associated with the baseposting.com site (presumably operated by the same individual or group). No personal identity (individual or organization name) is disclosed on the profile or website – the operators remain pseudonymous and there is no overt mention of any real-world identity.

Stated Purpose & Self-Description

Bio and Mission: The account’s stated purpose, per its bio, is simply being “a very serious account that posts about Base” ¹. This tongue-in-cheek description signals a mix of earnest enthusiasm and meme humor. In essence, @baseposting positions itself as a dedicated poster/promoter of Base, which is Coinbase’s Layer-2 blockchain network on Ethereum. The tone (“very serious” about Base) is intentionally ironic, suggesting a community ethos of playful yet focused support for the Base ecosystem. There is no formal mission statement beyond the bio, but the consistent theme is advocacy and community rallying around Base.

Content Focus: Public summaries describe @baseposting as an account spotlighting the Base network and the Base App (Coinbase's social app for onchain content) ³. In late 2025, it gained attention by sharing memes, blue square images (Base's brand color), and rallying calls to get users (especially smartphone users) worldwide to participate on Base ³. The account itself has tweeted exhortations such as "i don't know who needs to hear this but you can literally get paid for baseposting" – a reference to the idea that using Base's social platform can earn rewards ¹². This reflects the account's self-described role as both cheerleader and information hub for the Base community.

Public Statements: No formal press releases or official "about us" text exist from the account owners. However, their behavior and taglines imply a purpose of community-building and virality: encouraging people to "show up regularly, post content, interact with others, and build..." on Base ³. The term "baseposting" itself is framed as a daily habit or movement – essentially, posting content on Base consistently. In summary, the account presents itself as the unofficial mascot or rally-point for the Base social ecosystem, with a mix of sincerity (promoting Base's growth) and internet humor.

Content Behavior (Observed)

Example of community "baseposting" content: A user posts from horseback as featured on baseposting.com, illustrating the playful and ubiquitous nature of the trend ¹³ ¹⁴.

Tone and Style: @baseposting's feed is characterized by an enthusiastic, meme-forward style. The account frequently amplifies content from others that reference "baseposting" or Base, often with humorous commentary. For example, the account highlighted a community member "baseposting from a horse" as a comedic achievement ¹³. The caption "We basepost everywhere" accompanied this, underlining the lighthearted, almost absurd dedication to posting about Base in any context ¹⁴. This blend of earnest evangelism with internet humor (horseback posting, "blue mode" memes, etc.) is a signature of the account's behavior.

Engagement Patterns: Much of @baseposting's activity involves replying to or quoting other users to encourage them and reinforce the Baseposting meme. The account often replies with motivational one-liners when users talk about joining Base. For instance, in response to someone discussing broader Base adoption, @baseposting echoed, "billions will start baseposting" ¹⁵, suggesting an inevitable mass uptake. It frequently tags the official Base account (@base) or Coinbase leaders in posts, sometimes in a playful manner – e.g., tweeting at Coinbase CEO Brian Armstrong and Coinbase Dev staff that "baseposting is a priority" ¹⁶. These interactions show the account inserting the "baseposting" theme into serious discussions, blurring lines between meme and reality.

Content Themes: Common observable themes include:

- Daily Posting Encouragement: The account pushes a narrative of posting every day on Base ("never stop baseposting" sentiment). Community members often share "Day X of baseposting" updates. For example, one thread noted "Baseposting is kinda taking over my feed... everyone collectively decided to go full blue mode" ¹⁷, highlighting how pervasive the content became. @baseposting amplifies such sentiments to further the trend.
- Memes and Blue Squares: Users often post blue-colored images or emojis (reflecting Base's color) – the account curates these as part of the culture. The "blue square" meme is referenced in the X trending story as one of the viral contents ³. @baseposting's own posts include jokes, internet slang, and references understandable within crypto Twitter culture (for instance, phrases like “he’s building, he’s baseposting, he’s my mutual – go follow him” to boost others ¹⁸).

- IRL and Multimedia Posts: Beyond text, the movement extends to real life and multimedia. The website’s Hall of Baseposting shows photographs of people physically engaging in Base-themed stunts (e.g., the person on horseback) and screenshots of digital meme art. This indicates @baseposting not only shares text posts but also curates images/videos that symbolize the Baseposting trend across platforms.

Moderation & Conduct: The tone remains positive, promotional, and community-friendly. There has been no observed harassment or malicious behavior in the sample of content reviewed; the account’s persona is more akin to a community manager or hype-person. Content is largely retweeting others, issuing rallying calls, or celebrating user achievements on Base (for example, congratulating someone’s post impressions or token launch). There is minimal, if any, critical or negative content. Also notable is that the account keeps a strict focus on Base-related topics – it does not veer into unrelated politics or general crypto news outside the Base ecosystem. This consistent on-topic behavior underscores that @baseposting is deliberately branding itself around Base content.

Relationship to Base (If Any)

Affiliation: There is no official affiliation disclosed between @baseposting and Coinbase or the official Base project. The account does not claim to be an official Base channel. Instead, it appears to be a community-driven fan or enthusiast account. The language used (“posts about base” rather than claiming to represent Base) and the lack of any Coinbase branding suggest it is independent. Coinbase’s official communications or websites do not list @baseposting as a partner or team member. In fact, Coinbase’s site refers to “content prepared by third parties not affiliated with Coinbase” when mentioning community content like “baseposting” ¹⁹ , implying Coinbase considers such content external.

Engagement with Base Officials: Despite no formal tie, @baseposting has caught the attention of Base’s team and Coinbase executives publicly. Notably, Coinbase’s official X account replied playfully to @baseposting with the message, “@baseposting Where’s ours?”, suggesting Coinbase jokingly asking for their own “basepost” ²⁰ . Additionally, Jesse Pollak, the lead for Coinbase’s Base, has actively engaged in the baseposting trend. According to an X trending summary, “Creators like Jesse Pollak [have] join[ed] in with tokens such as $JESSE” as part of the Baseposting movement ²¹ . In other words, even Base’s leadership participated in community fun (e.g., Jesse Pollak issuing a personal token on Base called $JESSE as a nod to the trend). This indicates a friendly relationship: the Base team acknowledges and informally participates in the phenomenon, even if not officially behind it.

Community vs Official Lines: The Base network’s official X handle (@base) and team often emphasize building on Base, and @baseposting amplifies those messages. For example, if Base announces a feature or adoption metric, @baseposting will echo it with a Baseposting spin (like reiterating that more people should start baseposting). However, no evidence shows that @baseposting is run by Coinbase employees or contractors. It emerged organically (or at least presents itself as such) and sometimes even takes a slightly irreverent tone that an official corporate account likely would avoid.

No Disclaimers: The account does not explicitly disclaim affiliation (e.g., it doesn’t say “unofficial” or “parody”). It relies on context for users to infer that it’s a community account. The rapid follower growth and the viral nature have likely led some to assume it is part of Base’s marketing, but public evidence so far frames it as a fan-driven initiative. Coinbase and Base benefit from the enthusiasm, but they have not publicly endorsed or formally partnered with baseposting.com or the account beyond casual interactions on X.

Website Structure & Claims

Site Overview: The associated website baseposting.com is titled “The Hall of Baseposting” ²². It serves as a content hub or archive for the Baseposting movement. The site’s landing page presents itself as a kind of digital museum or curation platform: “A curation of baseposts spotted on the timeline. From IRL content to digital deep cuts, they’re all here.” ²³. The version is labeled “v.2.0.4” (which suggests iterative development). The overall aesthetic is reminiscent of a retro computing interface – it even includes phrases like “DIGITAL_HERITAGE_PRES.EXE” and “SYS.READY” in the text ²⁴ ²⁵, reinforcing the theme of archiving cultural artifacts.

Content Organization: The Hall of Baseposting is organized into categories, which are listed in an index: All Entries, Real World, Onchain Life, Memes on Memes ²⁶. These likely correspond to different types of “baseposts.” For example: - Real World – posts where Base enthusiasts bring the meme into physical life (as in the horseback example, categorized under REAL WORLD ²⁷). - Onchain Life – posts related to on-chain activities, possibly screenshots of interactions on the Base blockchain or Base App. - Memes on Memes – purely digital meme content, jokes piled on the Baseposting joke itself.

Entries on the site have an ID number (for instance, “ID: T — 905 // NEW” on one entry) suggesting a database of hundreds of collected posts ²⁸. Each entry features a title, a category tag, and the archived content (which can include images and quotes of tweets). The example shown: “Final Boss of Baseposting” is the title of an entry classified under REAL WORLD ²⁷, and it displays the content of a tweet (by user GKash) about baseposting from a horse, with images included ²⁹. The site clearly mirrors or embeds content from X posts – images are pulled from Twitter’s CDN (pbs.twimg.com) and the text shows Twitter handles and post text ²⁹.

Interactive Elements: The site invites community participation. There is a “Submit” section where users can contribute to the archive ³⁰. A prompt says: “Found a piece of baseposting heritage? Submit it for archival processing and eternal preservation.” ³¹. The submission form (as described on the page) asks for the link to the tweet, category selection, and context/notes ³². This indicates an open curation model – the site maintainers allow anyone to suggest content, which they may then approve and add to the Hall. It’s not automated; it’s curated (“archival processing” implies a review before something is added).

Claims and Disclosures: The website itself provides no information about its creators or sponsors. There are no “About us” or “Contact” pages visible in the simple interface. The only footer text is a copyright line “© 2025 Hall of Baseposting” ²⁵. This suggests the site is an ad-hoc project, likely run by the same person/people behind the @baseposting account (though this isn’t explicitly stated, the synchronized branding strongly implies it). The purpose of the site is implied rather than explicitly stated: it exists to celebrate and document the Baseposting phenomenon. The tagline “Modern Internet Era – Post Collection Data – Archive online” hints that it’s positioned as a historical record of this social media trend ²⁴.

Content on Site: As of the latest view (version 2.0.4, presumably late 2025), the site is relatively minimalistic. It shows the index and a few latest entries. It’s possible the site updates continuously with new “Baseposts” (noting the example entry was marked “NEW”). The nature of claims on the site is mostly celebratory or humorous (e.g., calling something the “Final Boss of Baseposting” as a joke). There are no factual or technical claims made on the site about Base itself – it stays on the meta level of discussing posts and memes. There are also no obvious commercial elements (no ads, no sign-up prompts beyond the contribution form, no token sale links).

In summary, baseposting.com functions as a community archive with a quirky presentation, reinforcing the cultural narrative that “Baseposting” is something significant enough to preserve. It doesn't formally declare any affiliation or purpose beyond that curation role.

Monetization Signals (Observed Only)

On-Chain Rewards: A core aspect of the Baseposting phenomenon is the idea that users can earn monetary rewards by posting on Base's social platform. @baseposting heavily emphasizes this. For instance, the account tweeted that one can “literally get paid every week for posting about Base” ¹². This refers to Base App's creator rewards program. Indeed, multiple sources confirm that Base App (also referred to as @baseapp on X) distributes weekly rewards (denominated in USDC stablecoin) to users based on the engagement their posts receive ¹² ³. A crypto community member summarized it: “You get weekly creator rewards paid in USDC just for posting. More likes, comments and reposts = bigger payout. They drop rewards every Wednesday.” (third-party post, not directly cited here). Coinbase's own Base App announcement notes users can “Earn from anything you create.” ³³. In practice, this means @baseposting and others who post popular content on Base App are literally earning cryptocurrency (USDC) as a result of their Base posts. This reward mechanism is a key monetization signal: it incentivizes the entire Baseposting movement by offering financial reward for participation. However, it's important to note these rewards are an official Base App feature, not something provided by @baseposting itself – the account is simply evangelizing the opportunity.

Tokenization & NFTs: Another monetization-related signal is the mention of tokenized posts and user tokens in the Baseposting context. The trending story on X highlighted that Baseposting “spotlights... the Base App for... trading tokens” ³ and gave the example of users like Jesse Pollak having personal tokens (e.g. $JESSE) ²¹. The Base App, upon its December 2025 relaunch, introduced features to mint social tokens or NFTs representing content and people. @baseposting reports on and encourages this behavior – effectively promoting a nascent creator economy on Base. For instance, community members have created novelty tokens named after the Baseposting meme itself: a “$BASEPOSTING” token exists on the Base network ³⁴. While $BASEPOSTING token appears to be a community-driven memecoin (with negligible market cap and only ~14 holders as per one tracker) ³⁴, ³⁵ it is indicative of the monetization theme around the trend. @baseposting has not been seen directly shilling this token, but the token's existence is part of the broader ecosystem of Baseposting where anything – even the meme name – can be financialized.

Direct Monetization by Account: The @baseposting account itself does not overtly solicit money. There are no known donation addresses, no merchandise links, no paid advertisements visible in its content. Its monetization appears to be indirect, via the mechanisms above (i.e., the account gains USDC rewards from Base App engagement and possibly ad-revenue sharing from X due to high engagement, since the account is X-verified). The website baseposting.com similarly shows no ads or sales. There is no paywall – all content on the site is freely accessible. The site's purpose seems non-commercial (archival/community service).

Community Incentives: Beyond official Base App rewards, @baseposting also leverages social capital as a form of incentive. The account frequently gives shout-outs to prolific “base posters,” potentially boosting their following. This encourages users to participate in hopes of recognition. In one tweet, @baseposting wrote in support of a user, “he's building he's baseposting he's my mutual go follow him” ¹⁸, effectively acting as a community amplifier. While not a monetary signal in itself, this behavior helps grow the Base ecosystem which can indirectly lead to monetization for participants (more followers can mean more tips/rewards, etc.).

In summary, the monetization signals around baseposting are platform-centric: the existence of weekly USDC payouts for content, the creation of novel tokens/NFTs related to the trend, and possibly any X platform monetization (e.g., paid subscriptions or ad revenue share) that @baseposting qualifies for due to its large following (though the latter is not confirmed publicly). The account does not appear to be directly selling anything or running ads on its own. All observed monetization is tied to platform features and community creativity rather than the account monetizing its audience in a traditional way.

Governance & Accountability Signals

Transparency of Ownership: @baseposting provides no public information about who operates it. There are no named individuals, no organizational entity, and no contact email in the bio or on baseposting.com. The only clue is a community site (nounspace or similar) listing for a “Base Posting” channel, which mentions an owner alias “Mr. Doctor | Base Developer” ³⁶ – however, this is an external reference and not verified on official channels. Essentially, the governance structure is opaque: it appears to be run by one or more pseudonymous enthusiasts. This lack of transparency is typical for viral social accounts, but notable given the account’s influence.

Account Verification: The account’s verified status on X (attained in Oct 2025) ² indicates the operator is willing to undergo some identity or phone verification (as per X’s requirements) and has subscribed to premium. However, verification in this context does not reveal identity to the public; it’s mainly a trust signal on the platform. It also possibly allows the account to edit tweets or enable subscriptions, but @baseposting has not advertised any paid subscription content or Substack, etc.

Content Moderation & Guidelines: There is no published moderation policy for baseposting.com or the @baseposting community. The Hall of Baseposting site does not outline criteria for inclusion beyond the implicit theme. The submission process is open to the public ³¹, but ultimately the site maintainer decides what gets archived. This suggests a sole curator or small team making editorial decisions. Users have no insight into those decisions or any appeal process. On X, the @baseposting account behaviorally acts in good faith (no abuse observed), but again no explicit code of conduct is posted.

Community Governance: On X, a “Base Posting” community group exists (an X Communities feature with ~4,300 members) ³⁷. The description calls it “a very serious community of base posters for baseposting” ³⁷, echoing the main account’s tagline. It’s likely that @baseposting serves as the admin or was the creator of this community (the branding is identical). If so, the account would have moderation powers in that community (such as inviting or removing members). No public logs of that are available, but the existence of the community suggests a layer of organization – a space where enthusiasts gather under @baseposting’s umbrella. Still, there is no formal governance document; it’s informal and dependent on platform tools.

Accountability Mechanisms: There are few to none visible. The account does not list any way to contact the operator except via X itself. There is no stated commitment to accuracy or corrections – though notably, since the content is largely memes and community highlights, the scope for misinformation is limited. If the account were to make a false claim about Base, there’s no structured way for the public to demand correction besides replying or community notes on X. The site baseposting.com similarly lacks any disclaimer or terms of service. It’s effectively an art/project site, not a service platform, so while this is not unusual, it means accountability rests entirely on the reputation and goodwill of the anonymous curator.

Legal & Ethical Considerations: Being unofficial, @baseposting isn't bound by Coinbase's communications policies. However, because it deals with user-generated content, there could be copyright considerations (e.g., archiving tweets with media on the website). The site presumably relies on the understanding that tweets and images are being shared in a community context (and possibly fair use for commentary/archival). There's no stated DMCA policy. Again, the lack of formal governance means these aspects are not addressed publicly.

In summary, governance signals are minimal: @baseposting operates in the realm of social media virality where informal trust and community acceptance are the norm. No clear accountability structure or disclosure of decision-making is provided. Users engaging with it must implicitly trust the entity behind it or simply treat it as a playful community figurehead.

Timeline of Public Activity

- July 2025: The account is created (initially under the handle @basemaxxing) ⁷ ¹. Early activity is low-profile as Base (the L2 network) was still growing its userbase. The account's initial focus was on Base-related crypto content in general.
- August–September 2025: Coinbase's Base network gains users; talk of on-chain social grows. The term "baseposting" begins circulating as users encourage each other to post daily on Base. In this period, @basemaxxing/@baseposting had a modest following (~500 by late September) ³. The content likely included generic Base promotion and community interactions in the lead-up to a bigger trend.
- October 1, 2025: @basemaxxing obtains X verification (blue checkmark) ². On the same date, a slight rebranding in tone occurs – the bio changes from "very serious cryptocurrency account on base" to "sorta serious..." ⁸, indicating a playful approach to seriousness. This suggests awareness of building a distinctive persona. Also around this time, the Base community on X started coalescing (tweets in early October talk about "baseposting" as a concept, and the account might have been experimenting with the meme).
- Mid October 2025: The account updates location to "Gary, Indiana" and briefly uses humorous phrases like "terminally onchain" ⁹. These changes align with the increasing meme-ification of the account – possibly as engagement grew, the operator leaned into eccentricity to stand out.
- Late October 2025: The term "Baseposting" gains traction on X and other social channels (e.g., Reddit users note it "taking over [their] feed" by late October) ¹⁷. @basemaxxing likely participated heavily, using the hashtag #baseposting or replying to those who mention it.
- November 12, 2025: Major pivot – the account formally renames to @baseposting and adopts the identity of "Base Posting" ⁷. The bio is edited to emphasize "a very serious account that posts about base" ³⁸. This date can be seen as the launch of the official "Base Posting" persona/brand. The same day, the handle change is flagged by tracking tools (with a caution that handle changes can indicate sales, though here it was a rebrand by the existing user) ³⁹ ⁷. From this point, follower counts begin accelerating as the account is now the de facto figurehead of the trend.

- Mid/Late November 2025: Engagement skyrockets. Baseposting-related posts go viral. The account tweets notable lines (e.g., telling people they can get paid to basepost, celebrating community achievements). Base's internal team also engages; for example, on Nov 28-29, Coinbase's main Twitter account replied "Where's ours?" to a baseposting thread ²⁰, and Base developers like Jesse Pollak issued their joke tokens. This indicates by late Nov, the trend was acknowledged widely.
- Early December 2025: The baseposting.com website goes live. On Dec 8, 2025, @baseposting adds the site link to its profile ¹¹. The website likely launched around the same time or shortly before. Version 2.0.4 suggests it might have iterated quickly. The site begins curating content, marking a new phase where the movement has a dedicated external presence.
- December 17, 2025: Coinbase formally launches the Base App to the public (the social trading app integrally connected with baseposting) ⁴⁰. This provides an official platform for the content that @baseposting had been encouraging. Around this date, many new users join Base App, and baseposting activity surges further. The trending story updated on Dec 28, 2025, notes the momentum and predicts continuation into 2026 ⁴¹.
- Late December 2025: @baseposting's follower count nears 40K ³. The account posts a year-end recap or celebrates how far the community has come (one Instagram reel titled "baseposting 2025 RECAP" highlights the growth from 500 to ~40k followers, creation of art, memes, etc.) ⁴². It's a culmination of the viral trend's first big wave.
- January 2026: The baseposting trend continues into the new year. The account remains active daily, and Base App's user numbers are reportedly growing. @baseposting keeps functioning as a community bulletin board – e.g., reminding people of "Base App payday" (Wednesdays) and encouraging newcomers. By this time, baseposting is an established subculture of the Base community.
- Projected into 2026: While not a part of the historical record yet, the discourse (from late 2025) predicts that baseposting could drive significant Base adoption in 2026 ⁴³. The account itself likely plans to keep evolving (the "Hall of Baseposting" might expand, perhaps new features or community events might be introduced). Any notable changes after Jan 2026 (such as monetization strategy shifts, or if the account reveals its team) are beyond the current public evidence.

This timeline underscores how quickly an informal community concept ("baseposting") evolved into a viral movement with its own central account and website, roughly over the span of Q4 2025.

Open Questions

These are important questions for which no public evidence provides a definitive answer as of now:

- Who is behind @baseposting? – The real identity (or identities) operating the account and website is not disclosed. It could be a single crypto community member, a small team, or even an insider acting unofficially. No clues beyond pseudonyms and behavior exist publicly.
- Origins of the Trend: Did the @baseposting account (as basemaxxing) start the baseposting trend, or was it a pre-existing meme that the account adopted and amplified? The account's rebrand suggests it intentionally took up the mantle, but it's unclear if it was responding to an organic trend or orchestrating it from early on.

- Coordination with Coinbase/Base: Is there any behind-the-scenes coordination between @baseposting and the Base team? Publicly there's no formal link, but the synchronicity with Base App's launch and the friendly engagement by Coinbase staff raise the question of whether Coinbase informally supports or strategizes around the baseposting phenomenon for marketing purposes.
- Monetization Intent: Apart from platform rewards, does @baseposting have plans to monetize its following (through merchandise, token launches, paid communities, etc.)? So far, nothing concrete is advertised. It remains to be seen if the account will introduce its own revenue streams as the movement grows (for example, selling NFTs of Hall of Baseposting entries or similar).
- Longevity of Baseposting: Is baseposting a temporary viral campaign or a sustainable community feature of Base? This question goes beyond the account to the broader phenomenon. If Base App rewards were to cease or interest wanes, what happens to @baseposting and the Hall of Baseposting archive? No clear answers until those scenarios play out.
- Moderation & Content Curation: What criteria does the Hall of Baseposting use to accept or reject submissions? And who ensures content is appropriate or not infringing? No process is published, leaving open how they handle, for example, offensive submissions or verifying authenticity of "IRL baseposts." This lack of transparency is an open question on governance.
- Affiliation Claims: The account doesn't claim to be official, but also doesn't explicitly disclaim it. Do users generally understand it's unofficial? If confusion arises, would the account clarify? This remains an open point, especially as more newcomers join Base – they might erroneously assume @baseposting is an official community manager role. No statement exists to guide that interpretation.

These unanswered questions highlight areas where further investigation or future disclosures would be needed to fully understand the entity and motives behind @baseposting.

Unknown / Not Disclosed

- Operator Identity: The individual or group running @baseposting is unknown. No names, faces, or verified identities have been provided on any platform. The account is essentially anonymous/pseudonymous to the public.
- Legal Entity: There is no information on whether "Hall of Baseposting" is backed by any legal entity, company, or DAO. It appears to be an informal project; if there's a formal structure (even a simple business or funded initiative), it has not been disclosed.
- Funding Sources: No explicit funding or sponsorship for the account or website is disclosed. For example, if someone is paying for the website hosting or if the account is funded to promote Base, that's not stated. It gives the impression of a grassroots effort, but the absence of any funding info leaves it an open matter.

- Relationship with Coinbase/Base: No official statement clarifies the relationship (or lack thereof) between @baseposting and Coinbase's Base team. Coinbase has not publicly endorsed or denounced it. Any collaboration, if it existed, is not publicly known. From the evidence, it's not officially part of Base – but this is an assumed negative, not a confirmed one.
- Disclosure of Rewards: The account has not published how much it has earned from Base App rewards or other monetization (if any). For transparency, one might expect a community leader to share that information, but @baseposting hasn't, so the extent of its gains from the activity (USDC or otherwise) is not documented.
- Content Selection Criteria: The methodology for what content gets featured on baseposting.com is not explained. It's unknown whether there's any policy (e.g., "must be Base-related, must have a certain number of likes, etc.") or if it's purely at the curator's whim. Also undisclosed is whether they have permission from content creators to archive their posts (likely not explicitly, given it's open Twitter content, but not confirmed).
- Moderation Policy: The site and community have no posted rules or moderation guidelines. It's not known how they handle inappropriate content or conflicts within the Base Posting Community on X. For instance, if someone submitted a fraudulent "basepost," there's no public policy on how that is handled.
- Data Practices: No privacy policy or data usage statement is present on baseposting.com. If users submit content via the form, it's unclear how that data is stored or if any user info is logged. Similarly, no cookie notices or tracking disclosures are evident – likely because the site is simple and not collecting user data beyond submissions, but this is not explicitly stated.
- Future Plans: The account has not outlined any roadmap or future plans. There's no known plan for governance (like turning the Hall of Baseposting into a DAO, or issuing a community token, etc.). All such possibilities remain speculative since nothing has been announced.

All the above points are not disclosed in any public-facing resource. The operation of @baseposting and baseposting.com remains largely opaque except for the content they publish. Stakeholders like community members, regulators, or platform trust & safety teams have to rely on observation and the account's history, as the principals behind the account have chosen not to reveal these details.

By compiling known information and highlighting these gaps, this report provides a transparent view of what is evidenced versus what remains unknown about @baseposting and its associated activities

3 6 .

1 4 5 15 16 18 Base Posting @baseposting - Twitter Profile | TwStalker
<https://twstalker.com/baseposting>

2 6 7 8 9 10 11 38 39 @baseposting history | xo2.com crypto twitter intelligence
https://www.xo2.com/twitter/twitter_user/baseposting/history

3 21 41 43 X
<https://x.com/i/trending/2004912745070956784>

12 i don't know who needs to hear this but you can literally get paid for ...
<https://x.com/baseposting/status/2010864368817451434>

13 14 The Hall of Baseposting

<https://baseposting.com/>

17 Baseposting a New trend : r/BASE

https://www.reddit.com/r/BASE/comments/1oy3mjo/baseposting_a_new_trend/

19 35 baseposting Price, BASEPOSTING Price, Live Charts, and Marketcap

<https://www.coinbase.com/en-gb/price/baseposting-base-0x09fa9743a113fc322d2cb91aa30a1b4f821f46ee>

20 @baseposting Where's ours?

<https://x.com/coinbase/status/2001687874450936166>

22 23 24 25 26 27 28 29 30 31 32 The Hall of Baseposting

<http://baseposting.com>

33 The Base App Is Now Open To Everyone, Everywhere

<https://blog.base.org/baseapp>

34 baseposting(baseposting) Price and Market Stats | TheBitTimes.Com

<https://thebittimes.com/token-baseposting-BASE-0xD3c0b02cC2b3cB88eea67Bd3f3331d037cE6f532.html>

36 baseposting | Nounspace

<https://www.nounspace.com/c/baseposting>

37 Base Posting Community on X - 4.3K Members - Twitter

<https://x.com/i/communities/1991809112070557893>

40 Coinbase's Base App Launches with Tokenized Posts and Rea...

<https://x.com/i/trending/2003289445500322221>

42 baseposting 2025 RECAP. #baseposting #baseapp #base - Instagram

<https://www.instagram.com/reel/DS35Em0AcS8/>